Governor General of Poland and one of Hitler's most trusted followers; a most important figure in the reorganization of German justice; former leader of the Nazi "League for True Justice" (Rechtswahrerbundes) and President of Academy for German Justice, posts now held by THIERACK; his whole career of terror in Poland shows him for what he really is; however, when Hitler announced the end of the independence of judges, Frank construed this to mean "political" independence; as he felt that the great majority of German judges were permeated with Nazi doctrine anyway, he thought this was a satisfactory compromise, would create a good impression, and quiet some uneasy minds in legal circles; Hitler, however, forbade this attitude as he is preparing for possible moment when the exhausted populace, unable to endure any more, will have to be driven by the Gestapo; at such a time he could permit no "independent"
